STATE UNIVERSITY OF NEW YORK AT STONY BROOK

March 30, 1987

Sea Grant Institute Moves to Campus

By Kevin Ireland

The New York State Sea Grant Institute has been relocated to Stony Brook from Albany and a faculty member has been appointed the director.

Robert E. Malouf, associate professor of marine sciences, assumed the directorship effective Jan. 1. He is administering a $1.85 million annual budget, $1.3 million of which goes to research. He hopes to maintain his ties with Stony Brook's Marine Sciences Research Center, where he has been a faculty member since 1977.

The Sea Grant Institute is a consortium working through the SUNY system and Cornell University, with offices both here and at Cornell. The institute promotes research and provides education, training, and advisory services on issues affecting the Great Lakes and the marine environment around the state's ocean coast.

Researchers funded by Sea Grant have studied subjects ranging from beach erosion to pollution, currents and tides, and the geology and chemistry of New York's coastal and Great Lakes regions.

Malouf has been associated with Sea Grant for 20 years. He has worked with the group in Oregon, Delaware, and New York. He is also president of the National Shellfisheries Association. At Stony Brook, he specializes in shellfish biology and has done extensive work to cultivate Long Island's scallop and hard clam crops.

The Sea Grant Board of Governors decided to move the institute from the state office building in Albany so that the research entity could work in a campus environment. Sea Grant's offices on South Campus are in the Marine Sciences Research Center but will not otherwise be affiliated with the center.

John Reeves Named Director of Physical Education

A nationally known educator and athletics director has been appointed to head the new Division of Physical Education and Athletics.

John A. Reeves, currently director of sports and recreation at the University of Rochester, has been appointed by Provost Jerry R. Schubel. His selection as the first permanent director comes from a national search carried on by a committee chaired by Theodore D. Goldfarb, associate vice provost for undergraduate studies.

Schubel said: "Dr. Reeves will bring to Stony Brook the experience, energy, and vision to continue development of Stony Brook's physical education and athletic programs using the wide range of resources available throughout the campus."

Reeves, who will formally begin his duties July 13, has already begun taking part in decision making. He has been consulted on Stony Brook's plans to elevate at least one intercollegiate sports team from NCAA Division III to Division I. Men's lacrosse and women's soccer are strong candidates.

Reeves retired in January after a two-year term as president of the Intercollegiate Soccer Association of America. He has served since 1982 as chair of the infractions committee of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference.

He said: "I see at Stony Brook, in what are sometimes overused words, a very great potential in Physical Education and Athletics. The first thing that attracted me was the creation of a new division and the plans to build an $11 million fieldhouse that will change the campus and the community. I participated in a similar effort at Rochester in 1981 and I look forward to this new venture.

"I also was attracted by the links that Physical Education has with other academic areas; for example, sports psychology and sports medicine. I see here a Physical Education faculty and staff loved by the university. I hope to help them get more opportunities in projects they have been developing. The future looks excellent for developing from a solid base built by the dedicated leadership."

The new division is made up of five departments: Physical Education, the academic area; men's athletics; women's athletics; intramurals and recreation; and facilities management.

John Ramsey, who was appointed associate professor of physical education, has been serving as interim director since July 1985. Sandra Weeden is director of women's athletics; Paul Dudzick, director of men's athletics; Patty Bostic, director of intramurals and recreation; and Norman Berhannan, facilities management director.

Reeves, 48, earned degrees at Montclair State College and Pennsylvania State University, and received his doctorate in education at Columbia University in 1983. He was at Drew University from 1969 to 1981 as professor of physical education, director of athletics, chair of the Department of Physical Education and soccer coach. He has been director of sports and recreation at Rochester since 1981. His Stony Brook appointment includes a professorship in physical education and he hopes to teach a course a semester.

His experience includes faculty, coaching, and intramurals at Bloomfield College, 1962-69, and recreation director in several New Jersey communities. He has been active over the years in numerous athletic organizations, including the Middle Atlantic States Collegiate Athletic Conference as soccer chair and executive committee member. He was chosen New Jersey college soccer coach of the year twice.

Reeves, whose dissertation was titled "Personality Characteristics of Athletes Who Play Different Positions in Soccer" is the author of The Soccer Games Book and The Coaches' Collection of Soccer Drills. He has written also for the Athletic Journal and Soccer Journal. Reeves is married and has two children.

Sucolian, April 9, 1959

...If they keep up their nuclear tests, the fallout is going to become so great that it can't help but have a bad effect on future generations. (Editorial)

The new dorms have finally made it. They now boast 23 girls and a wide assortment of furniture.

Well, it's back to work for the last eight weeks of school, here's to anyone who is planning to wash up in a blaze of glory.

State has athletic participation that few schools can equal. Just look at the figures:

20% of the male students participate in crew.

40% of the male students were turning out for basketball practice.

10% of the student body competed in the ping-pong tournament.

50% (at least) play cards regularly.

20% took part in the bowling program.

Not many schools can equal this record.

Statesman, March 22, 1967

There is only one sure way to halt complaints about tripling students in the dorms...make it pleasurable. How? Just admit a few more thousand freshman in addition to the onrushing hoards presently at our gates, awaiting the '67-68 year. This will force QUADRUPLE! for all! Everybody will want to triple then.

Newspaper Art Critics To Lecture

Have you wondered how a critic decides what's hot and what's not in the art world? The experts will solve the mystery April 6 at a conference, "Newspaper Art Criticism: Theory and Practice."

The free, all-day event will feature critics Michael Brenson of The New York Times, Gary Indiana of the Village Voice, Christopher Knight of the Los Angeles Herald Examiner, and Amei Wallach of Newsday. Art professor Donald Kuspit will moderate.

"It's intended for a broad and varied audience," said Assistant Professor of Art Michele Bogart, who is organizing the event. "We expect the critics will discuss the things they feel they should be covering, what they look for in art works, the relationship between art critics and academic audiences, the popularization of art..."

Each speaker will offer a 45-minute lecture, and then join for a panel discussion at 4 p.m. The audience is encouraged to question the critics. A reception in front of the art gallery, where artist Michael Singer will be exhibiting his work, will follow the discussion.

The conference will begin at 10 a.m. in the Fine Arts Center Recital Hall, but the critics invite the audience members to join them for coffee and Danish at 9:30.

A list of topics and times follows:
10 a.m.-Michael Brenson: "Notes on Newspaper Arts Criticism."

11 a.m.-Gary Indiana: (title to be announced)

Noon-2 p.m.-Lunch

2 p.m.-Christopher Knight: "The Yellow Kid and Mr. Mutt: Thoughts on Newspaper Art Criticism."

3 p.m.-Amei Wallach: "Newspaper Criticism: Who Are We Writing For and Who's Listening?"

Call the art department at 2-7250 for more information.

Graham Performs New Works for Viola

University Artist-In-Residence John Graham will perform two new works for viola as part of a recital April 4. The performance marks the New York premiere of "Dances and Obsessions" by Perry Goldstein, and "Four Pieces for Viola and Percussion" by John Lessard. Both works were written for Graham.

Graham has performed as soloist on three continents and has collaborated with well-known string groups such as the Julliard, Guaneri, Galimir, and Mendelssohn quartets, and the Kalichstein-Laredo-Robinson Trio. He has also performed premieres of numerous works for viola.

The April 4 recital is the second in a series devoted to music for the viola. In addition to the two new works, Graham will perform Bach's "Suite in G-Major," Brahms's E-flat Major Sonata, accompanied by pianist Gwendloyn Mok, and Scottish traditional music. Other accompanying artists include Davik Krakauer, Marjorie O'Brien, and Dennis Smylie, all on clarinet, and Raymond Des Roches on percussion.

The recital begins at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Recital Hall. General admission is $9; $5 for students and senior citizens. Call the box office at 2-7320 for more information.

Danto To Lecture on Furniture as Language

Arthur Danto, one of the nation's leading philosophers of language and art, will be at Stony Brook on Thursday, April 2, to give the fourth annual Sidney Gelber University Distinguished Lecture on the Fine and Performing Arts.

The lecture, "Furniture as Language: The Chair as Symbolic Form," will be given at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Recital Hall.

Danto has taught philosophy at Columbia University since 1951 and as a visiting professor throughout the nation. Besides contributing widely to professional journals, he has written numerous books, including Nietzsche as Philosopher, Analytical Philosophy of History, and Mysticism and Morality.

His Stony Brook lecture will focus on chairs as artifacts that bear meaning and express beliefs. Danto will work with representations of empty chairs in several great paintings and sculptures to show that chairs are symbolic forms, subjects for representation in art, and, finally, works of art themselves.

This is an endowed lectureship, supported by the Stony Brook Foundation, and established in honor of Sidney Gelber, professor of philosophy. While academic vice president from 1971 to 1981, Gelber played a major role in developing the University's faculty and bringing about construction of the Fine Arts Center. In addition to administrative posts at Stony Brook, he was acting president of the Mannes College of Music in New York City from 1964 to 1966.

The lecture is also sponsored by the Office of the Provost and Newsday. Call 2-7000 for more information.

FACULTY/STAFF

New Moskowitz Book on Pisano Sculpture

Cambridge University Press has published a book by Anita Moskowitz, Department of Art, titled The Sculpture of Andrea and Nino Pisano. In this illustrated volume, Moskowitz demonstrates that the works of this father and son represented two major currents in European art: late examples of the Parisian court style, and the beginnings of the Italian Renaissance in sculpture. The Pisanos are considered major 14th Century sculptors.

Ganetis Wins Staff Scholarship

Karin Ganetis, a nursing staff development instructor at University Hospital, has been awarded this year's Diana Dolgin Continuing Nurse Education Scholarship Award of the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation.

Ganetis will use the award to develop teaching tools for emergency room and obstetrical nurses in community hospital settings to enable them to care for high-risk obstetrical patients prior to transport to the University's obstetrical facilities.

Distinguished Physicist Dies

George Vineyard, 1974 recipient of the Stony Brook Foundation Award for Distinguished Contributions to Higher Education, died Feb. 21 at University Hospital following an illness. He was 66. In January, Dr. Vineyard had become president-elect of the American Physical Society and would have become president in 1988. From 1973 to 1981 he was director of Brookhaven National Laboratory, which plans a memorial service.

Teachers Teach Teachers

Some Stony Brook faculty are participating in a series of seminars designed for undergraduate college teachers of science. The "Chataqua Short Courses," presented at selected sites throughout the country, enable invited scholars to communicate new knowledge, techniques, and concepts directly to college teachers.

Sessions taught by our faculty are being offered here and at other campuses. For more information, call Les Paldy, Center for Science, Mathematics, and Technology Education, at 2-7075.

Sigma Xi, the Phi Beta Kappa of Research

Albert Einstein was a member. So was Marie Curie. And so are C.N. Yang, Jack Marburger and Homer Neal. All were or are members of Sigma Xi, a little-publicized but prestigious society that honors scientists and researchers.

In fact, Stony Brook, boasts more than 320 members of Sigma Xi, making it one of the largest chapters in the country. But chapter secretary Tom McNamara is far from satisfied. "Really every scientist on campus should be a member," says McNamara, a professor of oral biology and pathology. "This is the Phi Beta Kappa of research."

Sigma Xi was founded in 1886 by a group of students and a faculty member at Cornell who believed it was time to establish an honor society for scientists and researchers. The group wanted to both to honor the best in the business and to ensure that researchers conducted their work honorably and ethically. Over the years, society members have expanded the mission, and today, Sigma Xi furthers research by publishing a bimonthly magazine called American Scientist, sponsoring lectures, bestowing awards for outstanding contributions, and offering small research grants.

Stony Brook's chapter promotes research through activities and awards of its own. According to McNamara, who is also a member of Sigma Xi's national board, the local chapter co-sponsors several lectures each year, funds awards that recognize students for excellence in research, and this year will begin offering a travel grant to student researchers.

It's all part of the effort to support scientific research, he says, and to encourage the growth of the society on campus. "This is something every researcher and every student conducting research should be involved in. We

Bargain-Hunters Take Note: Campus Discount Service Available

A new campus service has been created to enable bargain-hunting faculty and staff to purchase selected items at discounts of up to 50 percent.

It's the brainchild of Richard Reeder, director of laboratories. Several years ago, after Hurricane Gloria left Long Islanders in the dark, Reeder helped put together a deal offering faculty and staff gas generators at a substantial discount. When 700 people signed up, he realized the need for an ongoing discount service.

Faculty and staff will be offered one item per year at 40-50 percent off.

Available items will be determined by an eight-person faculty-staff committee, "but we need input from the campus community. Let us know what you want to buy," says Reeder. Merchandise has to be relatively small, since storage is a problem. ("In other words," explains Reeder, "we can't offer refrigerators.")

Reeder also hopes to establish a small surcharge that would benefit employee-related services on campus, such as the University day care centers. Suggestions for recipients of the surcharge fees are welcome (see coupon below).

CAMPUS DISCOUNT SERVICE

I'd like to see the following items offered to Stony Brook faculty and staff with discounts up to 50% off:

I am am not in favor of giving surcharge money to campus groups such as day care centers.

Here are suggestions for groups to receive surcharge money:

The society accepts both associate and full members. Associate members are most often student researchers at the outset of their careers who have demonstrated "aptitude for research." Members are long-time researchers who have displayed "noteworthy achievement" through publications, patents, written reports, and similar means. Researchers cannot apply for membership. They must be nominated by current members, seconded by other current members, and approved by an admissions committee.

On April 7, researchers will have a chance to learn more about the society. Sigma Xi and the Department of Anatomy will co-sponsor a lecture by Dr. Alan Walker from Johns Hopkins University. Walker will speak on human evolution and the talk will take place in the Senior Commons on the second floor of the Chemistry Building. There will be a reception at 3:30 p.m.; the talk begins at 4 p.m.

Sophomore Michael Cortese (left) and junior Andy Steiner rehearse the play "Terra Nova." The production, directed by Prof. Tom Neumiller, will run until April 4 in Theatre I, Fine Arts Center.
