

You and Carl Bernstein

An Extra Credit Experience

It really makes no sense for us to invite you to hear the most famous investigative reporter in U.S. history if you don't have a sense of how he changed the world in 1972.

To earn extra credit, you'll do the following:

1. Watch "All the President's Men," a drama based on Bernstein and Bob Woodward's expose of Nixon Administration wrongdoing. We strongly recommend you review this list: The Watergate Scandal Cast of Characters, before you watch the film, so you'll know who the actors mean when they talk about John Mitchell, for instance.) You can watch the film on any device, thanks to the Library, using the link below. When the system asks you to log in, use your Stony Brook NetID and password.

ALL THE PRESIDENT'S MEN, PART 1: The film

<http://echocontent.sinc.stonybrook.edu:8080/ess/echo/presentation/d7693255-cbd5-4582-a1c6-ba209bdd19ee>

2. Attend Carl Bernstein's talk, Oct. 15, 8 p.m., SAC Auditorium¹
3. Email your recitation instructor the answers to the following questions:
 - a) What surprised you about Bernstein, or the things he said?
 - b) In the film, what were the two reporters doing in the Library of Congress?
 - c) Which concept from the News Literacy course did he address most forcefully? Explain
 - d) In the film, what was the significance of the potted plant?
 - e) Of all that he said, with what did you most strongly agree or disagree? Explain.

You'll note there is a Part 2 link in the Echo system. It's a 28-minute commentary that is optional viewing.

¹ If your schedule won't permit you to attend, video of his talk will be posted on The News Literacy Channel within three days of the live event.